Note:

Sorry for my long absence.

I am sorry to read that under the Governor's new plan for the CDPAP Concepts will no longer serve Consumers from its home communities. I guess the people who are currently being served in NYC will be moved to another agency and I hope the staff, some of whom have been there for more than 20 years, will be accommodated in some way. Unfortunately, the more I read, the more I realize that the CDPAP of today has almost no connection to the relatively simple, funds saving, consumer empowering, program, that was Directed by Consumers and that I helped to build. I can only hope that light will be found at the end of the long tunnel we are in.

Here's Hoping

Home care supplier: New York state needs more time for Medicaid changes

By Kate Lisa New York State
October 17, 2024

One of four regional subcontractors helping to administer changes to a Medicaid home care program in the coming months said Thursday that New York lawmakers need to delay the April 1 deadline when they return to Albany next year.

The state is forging ahead to change the $9 billion Consumer Directed Personal Assistance Program under Medicaid, which more than 250,000 New Yorkers rely on for home care, in under six months. Pushback is growing for that timeline to be extended to change the program — including from companies partnering with the state to manage it.

"The timeline needs to be realistic," said Anthony Caputo, CEO of the nonprofit Concepts of Independence. "...Seeing and learning from what has happened in other states that have much smaller programs, it's going to be difficult."

The state Health Department is negotiating with Public Partnerships LLC to finalize a five-year, multi-billion-dollar contract for the company to take over CDPAP by mid-2025 — down from over 600 — to cut back on widespread fraud and abuse.

Concepts of Independence, which serves home care recipients in the Hudson Valley, is one of four core regional home care suppliers partnering with the state to assist PPL in the transition.

Current state law mandates that the other FIs must shutter by April 1.

"I've spoken to state senators about this, and to make this happen, they're going to have to extend the time," Caputo said. "The Senate, the Assembly and the governor are going to have to agree to extend that period of time so there is a smooth transition. ...I hope they open the window for another year."

Last week, eight people involved in the state's CDPAP were federally indicted, accused of defrauding $68 million through the program. Gov. Kathy Hochul has touted the indictment as proof that consolidating the program is the right move and will reduce program abuse and make it more financially viable.

"This was a process that was managed by our Department of Health, and for those trying to undermine the decision-making process of these professionals, these public servants, I resent that," Hochul told reporters in Albany on Thursday. "One only needs to look at the genesis of why we took on this issue. States like California, with double our population, have one fiscal intermediary to manage this program."

Caputo, who penned an op-ed Thursday supporting the program changes, said Concepts of Independence started CDPAP in the state in 1980 to serve about 100 disabled New Yorkers. The state program has skyrocketed to the nation's largest — growing from $2.5 billion annually in 2015 up to the current $9 billion price.

"The contract will be finalized very soon," representatives with PPL said in a statement Thursday. "We are prepared to execute the transition by April 1. If the Department of Health changes the timeline, we will accommodate their decision."

The powerful health workers union 1199 SEIU has an agreement with PPL that the company will not interfere with workers as they make a decision to unionize under the new agreement.

"We're looking forward to working with them, to both implementing the single FI and help the workers make the decision if they want to be represented by the union, but we didn't have a dog in the race about who will get the contract," 1199SEIU Interim Political Director Helen Schaub said.

Union leaders with Home Health Care Workers of America, representing the largest number of health care workers in the state, continue to be skeptical that the changes will reduce fraud. Advocates have criticized PPL's history of mismanagement and losing contracts in other states.

Connor Shaw, the union's political director, is pushing for the state to transition CDPAP recipients to be reliant on traditional home care, which has more safeguards built in.

"This is not new or shocking that this program was being exploited," Shaw said. "For years, you couldn't ride the subway without seeing advertisements that said 'Get paid to take care of your mom.'"

"There's more sensible ways to address the aging care population. Bad actors have entered the industry because there's no regulation," he added. "The solution to this is not allowing one FI that has had issues in other states, it's to have more regulation and guardrails, and that's what exists in traditional home care."

Representatives with Hochul's administration said too many FIs do not comply with federal electronic filing and verification requirements, and PPL's billing system uses the federal system created under the 21st Century Cures Act.

"Anyone concerned about this should be pleased with our plan to strengthen CDPAP, since the state can now use its contractual oversight to ensure the program operates in compliance with Electronic Visit Verification," a spokesperson with Hochul's office said Thursday.

Caputo said New York transitioning to a single FI is the correct move, but only with proper communication with all CDPAP workers and recipients.

"It is going to work," Caputo said. "But information must go out sooner than later."

Every worker must have documented medical exams and other paperwork digitized in the transition, but Caputo said some workers do not have an email address and must be tracked down in person.

Officials with the state Health Department met this week concerned with independent living centers, which will also serve as program subcontractors.

"They weren't even getting information," he said. "We all need to sit down at the table. There needs to be stakeholder meetings with consumers and stakeholders, potential FIs and local (Department of Social Security) so we can all answer each other's questions. It is going to be a large task, and it's going to take more time to do it properly."

Several lawmakers have expressed concerns about the quick change, even though they voted for the budget that established it in state law. Lawmakers this winter plan to probe the effectiveness of the transition during legislative budget hearings to determine how the timeline should be altered.

The change in the last budget was negotiated last minute behind closed doors, and without typical oversight by the state comptroller.

State Health Commissioner Dr. James McDonald has said the timeline could be flexible, but New York's competitive bidding process was done correctly.

Opinion: CDPAP is here to stay in NY. A new partnership will benefit us all

Anthony Caputo
Special to the USA TODAY Network
October 17, 2024

As the leader of a non-profit organization that helped to pioneer consumer directed home care over 40 years ago, I've watched this issue become a subject of passionate discussion in recent months across New York.

The topic is our state's Consumer Directed Personal Assistance Program — commonly known as CDPAP — and some understandable confusion about the program's future for the approximately 250,000 New Yorkers who rely on it for home care.

But despite what you might have heard recently, I have good news: the truth is that CDPAP is here to stay — and it's getting stronger.

I know this because our non-profit organization, Concepts of Independence, is part of a new statewide partnership that, pending final approval, will include more than 30 regional and community-based groups that are joining forces in a unified effort to make CDPAP even better and more effective for New Yorkers who need it.

Under a plan that was first approved by Gov. Kathy Hochul and the state Legislature earlier this year and then further advanced in an announcement last week, this diverse and experienced statewide partnership is prepared to ensure that home care users and their caregivers across New York are protected now and in the future.

And our partnership is taking time to make sure it gets done right. This plan isn't taking effect overnight — and there will be months of preparation for this transition, through mid-2025.

More specifically, Concepts of Independence is one of four core regional partners working with PPL, our statewide partner, to help deliver high-quality service.

While we will continue to serve consumers throughout all of our current New York counties, our organization will lead CDPAP efforts in the Hudson Valley area — including Rockland, Dutchess, Putnam and the surrounding counties. Three other core regional partners will lead efforts in other areas of the state.

As a core regional partner, we'll also be working closely with a number of community-based partners who have also been operating within CDPAP in New York for many years. Our community-based partners will help us ensure that we deliver the personalized, multilingual and culturally sensitive care that home care users and their families deserve.

Why is cultural competency so important when it comes to home care? It ensures that personal assistants and other stakeholders can communicate effectively with individuals from different backgrounds and with various abilities.

Meeting individuals where they are is vital, too – both physically and linguistically. Communication can be a major barrier for vulnerable individuals receiving care as they may struggle to accurately convey their care needs. Concepts of Independence has an extensive workforce tailored to support these cultural and linguistic priorities to help consumers advocate and navigate for their unique needs.

Last week's announcement on CDPAP is the start of a transition process over the coming months that will be focused on discussing issues like this directly with home care users, caregivers and advocates. Alongside PPL, our leadership team will be connecting with CDPAP stakeholders every step of the way.

I am confident that once we proceed through that transition process, our statewide partnership will deliver a stronger CDPAP for New Yorkers.

Why? Because at organizations like ours, consumer directed home care is in our DNA – and it's part of what makes us proud to be New Yorkers. We'd never let a program like CDPAP fail for the people who need it.

Anthony Caputo is CEO of Concepts of Independence – a 501(c)(3) not-for-profit organization whose only purpose is to administer the Consumer Directed Personal Assistance Program (CDPAP) in New York State.

Amid Ongoing Controversy In New York, Public Partnerships Is Awarded CDPAP Contract

By Joyce Famakinwa

October 1, 2024

Public Partnerships LLC (PPL) — an Alpharetta, Georgia-based financial management services company — has been awarded the fiscal intermediary contract in New York. PPL will take over as the sole administrator of the state's Consumer Directed Personal Assistance Program (CDPAP).

“We are excited to have the opportunity to serve CDPAP consumers and personal assistants,” Maria Perrin, chief growth and strategy officer at PPL, told Home Health Care News. “Consumer direction programs are all we do as a business. For years, we’ve not only been operating throughout several states, but we’ve made it our purpose and mission to advance access to consumer direction and make these programs stronger, sustainable and more culturally competent. This is a great opportunity for us, and we are really excited to be partnering with our [fiscal intermediary] partners.”

Through CDPAP, a Medicaid-funded home care program, people seeking care are allowed to hire a caregiver of their own choice. This often means informal caregivers, which are paid for their services through the program.

Roughly 700 businesses currently serve as fiscal intermediaries, many of which are home care providers themselves. The state is looking to save $1 billion annually by appointing one administrator.

As part of the agreement, PPL must work with four local organizations, and a network of 30 home care agencies.

“Our approach to this was to make sure that we put together a partnership with existing CDPAP fiscal intermediaries and with the independent living centers,” Perrin said. “That would make sure there’s ample capacity from a volume standpoint and from a linguistic standpoint, making sure that people who are not English speakers continue to be served. Those people who have disabilities, or cultural or religious considerations, would continue to be served. At this point, we have over 30 existing CDPAP fiscal intermediary partners that we’ve identified, in addition to the 11 independent living centers, who will continue their work.”

Perrin noted that with state approval, PPL is open to identifying and partnering with even more organizations.

PPL will also relocate its headquarters to New York. The move will create over 1,200 jobs, according to a press statement.

Additionally, The Chinese American Planning Council will aid in managing the program in Long Island, Westchester County and New York City.

Uncertainties around CDPAP

With these changes to CDPAP, Emina Poricanin, founder and managing attorney of the New York-based Poricanin Law, believes that many providers will be weighing their options.

“As far as the providers are concerned, this is just additional uncertainty about their future as a business,” she told HHCN. “A number of them are, even more expeditiously, exploring other lines of personal care services that they can offer in New York State because they have no choice but to pivot from this program.”

For some, this means transitioning patient care hours into a traditional licensed home care services setting and out of CDPAP, Poricanin noted.

In addition to fiscal intermediary restructuring, Poricanin pointed to the significant decrease in reimbursement rates as another area of concern for providers.

“[It] takes out, largely, any incentive for a provider to be in this program,” she said. “Irrespective of what happens with PPL, or any single statewide fiscal intermediary, there’s simply very little money in this program. Therefore providers, regardless of what happens with the single statewide [fiscal intermediary] restructuring, should and are looking for long term into what they can do with this line of business.”

Poricanin also believes that the state may see additional lawsuits, specifically ones that challenge if the appointment was a true competitive bidding process.

“The number has not been released, but based on my own knowledge of the market, I assume there were at least 200 applications that were submitted to New York State, and yet they were able to turn those around from mid-August and send out rejection letters yesterday,” she said. “How did they get through all of those applications that quickly, if they were actually reviewing the applications and giving each applicant a fair opportunity to apply? That is probably going to be the subject of some litigation — that the process was not conducted fairly.”

NY disability rights advocates worry about assistance program changes

Story by Edwin J. Viera
October 01, 2024

New York disability rights advocates are voicing concerns about changes to what's known as the Consumer Directed Personal Assistance Program.

On October 1, New York State will contract with a single provider for the program.

CDPAP provides services for people who are chronically ill or have physical limitations and who need help with daily life. Gov. Kathy Hochul says the reason for the change is to cut high Medicaid costs.

But Sharon McLennon-Wier, Ph.D. - Executive Director of the Center for Independence of the Disabled New York - predicted the move will have resounding impacts.

"Anyone with a disability that has this program could lose their home healthcare assistance - either from maybe neighbors or friends, or even family members," said McLennon-Wier, "and we already know that there's a home health-aide shortage all over the country."

Gov. Hochul noted the program has been subject to mismanagement, but critics say she didn't consult its leaders.

Several agencies supporting the idea of keeping CDPAP local have been cited by the New York State Comptroller for wage theft. But the provider set to take it over isn't much better.

Public Partnerships LLC had contracts terminated in five other states, and was subject to class-action lawsuits over home-care workers' pay in Pennsylvania.

Feedback from New Yorkers with disabilities has mostly been questions about CDPAP's future.

McLennon-Wier said she is among those waiting to see what happens next - as she said they've received little guidance from the governor's office.

She added that it can be frightening to possibly lose much-needed care.

"I think anyone who has to depend on someone for that day-to-day care," said McLennon-Wier, "to have to worry - especially if they live alone - is really something that, mentally, that a person in this situation shouldn't have to deal with."

A bill has been introduced in the New York State Legislature to curb these changes. If it passes, it would require any CDPAP provider to be licensed by the State Department of Health starting in 2026.

Currently, providers can operate without formal licensure.

Find My FI

<https://cdpaanys.org/findmyfi/>

CDPAANYS recommends doing thorough research before selecting a fiscal intermediary. Wages, benefits, and programs can vary between providers. Your Medicaid service coordinator or plan care manager should provide you with a list of all options.

The fiscal intermediaries listed on this site are current provider members of CDPAANYS. Our members have all been screened and interviewed before joining to ensure they operate according to the principles and philosophy of Consumer Direction.

Your FI should never ask for your workers to sign a non-compete agreement.
