Notes

Consumers Wanted: For an Employment Information Bridge to work it requires traffic to flow in both directions. If you are in a Consumer Directed Personal Assistance Program, you will eventually need to find a new Home Care Worker. And up to now you may have relied upon Friends, Family, an Agency or you may have chosen to put your own advertisement on the Internet (See the list of Internet resources on the PCA Employment Agency page of this newsletter). Therefore, to help you find the PCA Candidate of your choice, I urge you, to do everything you ordinarily do, to consider an Internet resource and to try www.ConsumerDirectedServices.com. Finally, if you try Consumer Directed Services, please spread the word. Tell your friends and associates about this FREE service.

Description of Schedule: Monday thru Friday

Description of Schedule: I am looking for a back up PCA

Comments: My requirements include, cooking, cleaning, laundry, escorting me places such as the doctor's office or other places that I may need to go. I am totally blind and need someone who is willing to work with and learn about my special needs as a person who cannot see. The candidate must be willing to communicate with me by phone regarding job related issues. I require punctuality. This means that the PCA must be able to arrive on time when I call upon her to work, and they need to consider traveling time to when they are scheduled to arrive and leave work. I am authorized 25 hours a week - 5 hours a day, Monday through Friday. I am connected with Concepts of Independence, which means that I hire the person and she gets paid by Medicaid through Concepts. I would like to start out with someone that is already signed up with Concepts if it is possible but will not exclude someone who isn't. If you are not, you would need to be enrolled by Concepts and complete a physical examination. One of the special requirements I have is reading mail as I can't do it myself. Also, given my need to go to appointments, candidates with a car will get special consideration. As I said above, I am looking for a back up PCA, therefore I need someone who I can call upon with short notice as I may find out that my full time PCA cannot work either the day before or the same day. I know this is probably difficult but I can only work with the circumstances as they are presented to me.

Medicare penalizes hospitals for readmission rates

By Dan Cook August 5, 2013

For years now, hospital readmissions within a month of discharge have been driving up the cost that insurers and others pay for the care received by patients who end up back to the hospital.

Medicare is finally fed up with it, and has adopted a multi-pronged approach to reducing those costly admissions.

On the research side, Medicare is the focus of the Independence at Home federal demonstration project, designed to identify processes and policies that will reduce the one-month readmission rate. The three-year program just celebrated the conclusion of Year One.

On the payment side, Medicare is not waiting nearly so long for action. On Friday, it released records of 2,225 hospitals that it says are reporting readmission rates that need to be lowered. To get them to do so, Medicare is cutting its reimbursement payments to those hospitals.

In this second round of levying penalties in the form of lower payments, Medicare will nick hospitals for a total of $227 million, according to Kaiser Health News. This performance-based payment strategy began last October.

The hospitals in question represent about two-thirds of the hospitals eligible for Medicare payments. About the same number were cited during the first round of penalties.

Of the hospitals sanctioned, fines for 1,371 were lower this time around, 1,074 sustained more damage, and 283 that escaped penalties last time were included this time.

Hospitals that treated large number of low-income patients were more likely to be penalized than those treating the fewest impoverished people.

The Independence at Home demonstration involves 18 health providers nationwide that were selected as test sites to help develop new strategies for reducing both one-month hospital readmissions and trips to the ER.

Participating organizations may be eligible for substantial increased Medicare payments based upon the cost savings they realize from reducing such events. These strategies would then become best practices for the industry.

Don't mess with the home-care exemption for those with disabilities

By Kelly Buckland | JULY 29, 2013 AT 12:10 PM

Thousands of American families daily face the difficult decision of how to secure in-home services for themselves or a loved one.

For an individual with disabilities or an elderly person, remaining in the home rather than an institutionalized setting is of paramount importance. Hiring someone to help with daily tasks can make it possible for people to remain in their homes.

Unfortunately, this essential option for in home support is being threatened by the Obama administration without meaningful consideration of the impact it could have on the disability community.

If successful, their policy change will sharply increase the costs of in-home services, force people with disabilities to bring multiple people into their homes, reduce the availability of family and friend attendants and cut the take home pay of attendants.

At issue is an exemption in a 75-year-old law called the "Fair Labor Standards Act," which guarantees qualified workers a minimum wage and overtime pay.

When it was passed, this law included an exemption for those providing "companionship services," a category that included in-home personal assistance services.

The reason for the carve-out was such services aren't like a normal nine-to-five job. In-home attendants often work odd hours and it may often be a family member they're working for. They grow close to the people they work for and the continuity of care they provide an individual with disabilities is vitally important.

Today, there are more than 56 million individuals with disabilities in the U.S. Many of them will need assistance at some point to stay in their own homes.

Also, the needs of the elderly continue to grow, and that number will climb sharply as baby boomers retire. Now, national long-term care costs already top $342 billion a year.

Home and community-based services — which are more cost-effective — can be one answer to control costs, but not if the administration gets its way on the Labor Department's proposed rule.

Those who want to close this companionship exemption in the Fair Labor Standards Act argue that in-home workers deserve the same rights to minimum wage and overtime protections as other domestic workers.

This campaign has good intentions, but NCIL believes the way the current rule is written, it would have disastrous unintended consequences and make in-home services unaffordable for many individuals with disabilities and seniors.

This rule change would effectively eliminate the "live-in companion" model, where an attendant lives with an individual, which for many families is an ideal arrangement.

If this exemption is eliminated, NCIL and many others in the disability community believe it will significantly impact the continuity of care provided to individuals with disabilities, particularly people with the most significant disabilities.

Providers simply will not be able to afford the overtime pay given existing reimbursement levels and will need to replace home care workers before they reach overtime eligibility.

Also, it could potentially add to the out of pocket costs for individuals, and according to the administration's own analysis, the rule change will force some individuals to leave their own homes and go into an institution.

Experts who've studied the rule note that it could even end up limiting the ability of individuals with disabilities and seniors to enlist family and friends to work in paid positions, putting another critically important option at risk.

This rule change would add significant new costs to the already cash-strapped state Medicaid programs. Today, Medicaid is the single biggest payer for long-term services and supports, spending $140 billion every year on this important service.

The National Association of Medicaid Directors has warned that subjecting in-home providers to these labor laws would significantly raise program expenses. And they agree that this rule change will force people with disabilities and seniors into more expensive institutional settings.

A cumbersome, one-size-fits-all federal in-home worker rule will put the most desired option, staying in one's home, in jeopardy and drive up costs for the Medicaid program.

The Obama administration should resist this effort and work with the disability community on common sense solutions.
