SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

I. Background

Section 3024 of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act of 2010 (the Affordable Care Act) (Pub. L. 111-148, enacted on March 23, 2010), amends title XVIII of the Social Security Act (the Act) by establishing the Independence at Home (IAH) Demonstration. The IAH Demonstration will test a service delivery model that utilizes physician and nurse practitioner directed primary care teams to provide services to high cost, chronically ill Medicare beneficiaries in their homes. Participating practices will be accountable for providing comprehensive, coordinated, continuous, and accessible care to high need populations at home and coordinate health care across all treatment settings. Participating practices may share in savings under the demonstration if specified quality measures and savings targets are achieved.

Independence at Home Demonstration Project Announced

Tuesday, 20 December 2011 00:00

From the HHS News Release:

CMS will join with medical practices to test the effectiveness of delivering primary care services in a home setting on improving care for Medicare beneficiaries with multiple chronic conditions. Medical practices led by physicians or nurse practitioners will provide primary care home visits tailored to the needs of beneficiaries with multiple chronic conditions and functional limitations.

Created by the Affordable Care Act, the new Independence at Home Demonstration greatly expands the scope of in-home services Medicare beneficiaries can receive. The Independence at Home Demonstration will provide chronically ill patients with a complete range of primary care services. Participation in the Demonstration is voluntary for Medicare beneficiaries.

Congressmen Push CMS to Raise Priority for Independence at Home Program

Dec 20, 2011 - 2:13 pm

Sen. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., and Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., have sent a letter to Marilyn Tavenner, acting director of the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services, asking that the Independence at Home program be given higher priority.

The program is included in health care reform and is designed to deliver home-based care to Medicare patients with chronic conditions. It was supposed to start as a demonstration project for up to 10,000 beneficiaries on Jan. 1, 2012.

“Yet with three weeks remaining in the year, CMS still has not released guidelines for providers that wish to apply for participation,” the Dec. 7 letter said.

The congressmen said the Independence at Home Program could lower costs among the most ill and expensive Medicare patients, and noted that between 5 and 8 percent of Medicare’s sickest beneficiaries account for about 50 percent of all Medicare health costs.

The letter said that similar models for at-home care have lowered health care costs by 24 to 60 percent. The federal Department of Veterans Affairs has operated a program to provide home health care for decades, and reduced hospital stays by 62 percent and nursing home days by 88 percent.

Government Explores Homecare Option

December 27th, 2011 by Ashley Plauche

We have exciting news about a new demonstration project the government is doing to evaluate the benefits of home-based care! The new Acting Administrator for the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS), Marilyn Tavenner, has a medical background where she has seen first-hand the benefits of homecare. She is spearheading a 3-year project, called Independence at Home, where CMS can explore how timely in-home primary care can “prevent such (emergency department) visits and inpatient hospitalizations by bringing clinical expertise and mobile technology into the home when clinical instability is first developing”.
